

CONVENTION HERE TOMORROW

Third Street Is Approved For Highway 67

Federal Engineer Reveals Decision

Local Chamber Notified by Wire; 3 Routes Viewed

Chief of Bureau of Public Roads Makes Announcement.

OKEHS STATE MOVE

Division and Sixteenth Streets Only Other Routes Possible.

Selection of Third street as the route of Highway No. 67 through Hope from Texarkana to Little Rock, was apparently affirmed today in a telegram received here from Washington, D. C.

This route was indicated some time ago in an announcement from State Highway Department officials, but this morning the following telegram was received from Congressman Tillman B. Parks by Hope Chamber of Commerce:

Washington Telegram

Chamber of Commerce, Hope, Ark.: The chief of the Bureau of Public Roads today advises me that the federal district engineer has reached an agreement with the state highway engineer with reference to highway No. 67 through the city of Hope and recommends that the road be located on the south side of the Missouri Pacific Railroad and traverse the city of Hope via Third street. Since the Bureau of Roads here approves the recommendation of the state highway engineer the road will be located there doubtless at once. Best regards, Tillman B. Parks, Washington, D. C.

Several routes were suggested for the new highway in crossing the city, one group urging the retention of the present line of traffic on Division street, and another holding for sixteenth street.

Only Three Routes

Crossing Hope from east to west with a heavy traffic highway presented a big problem, state engineers said, because of all the cross-town streets, only the three named above are open from one side of the city clear through to the other.

Division and Sixteenth streets were both considered as possibilities, it was understood, but the railroad occupying part of Division street made this route too crowded; while Sixteenth street was opposed in some quarters because it was virtually out of the city limits.

In order to make Third street available, it is believed the state and federal governments will straighten the crooked intersection at Shover and East Third; and the city government is understood to have already promised its assistance in straightening West Third behind the Hope Steam Laundry building.

Jury Fixed Punishment for Mrs. Maude Long as 25 Years in Pen.

KINGSVILLE, Texas, Feb. 21.—(AP)—Mrs. Maude Long was convicted of poisoning her husband Jim Long by jury here today and fixed punishment at 25 years in the penitentiary. The case was given to the jury last night, and the jurors reported the verdict at the opening session of trial today.

A motion for a new trial was filed and a hearing for it was set March 14. Mrs. Long was calm as the verdict was read, but a few minutes later she wept.

Postal Contest Looming Up Here

Dr. J. L. Garner, County Committeeman, Favors Examination

A Republican county committee meeting that was to have been called to consider recommendations for the Hope postoffice, was reported cancelled today upon advice that Dr. J. L. Garner, of Washington, state committee man from this county, had already determined to ask for a postmaster's examination.

The revelation was reported to have been made in a letter written George Slaybaugh, county Republican chairman, by Wallace Townsend of Little Rock, national Republican committee man from Arkansas. The letter stated that the county committee was cancelled, but whether a date had been set for the postmaster's examination and whether it would be definitely held, The Star was unable to learn.

The customary procedure, it is understood, is for the county committeeman to make a recommendation to the state committeeman, who then transmits it to Washington.

In addition to the present postmaster, J. A. Davis, others who have been mentioned as likely to take the examination in the event it is held, are: Bill Brummett, George Slaybaugh and Clyde Martin.

Mr. Davis, who has been postmaster for the last eight years, was appointed from the ranks. He served four years as an assistant postmaster, and has been in the postal service for a total of 21 years.

New Plant Under Construction for Southern Ice Co.

Hope Plant To Be Replaced With New Equipment.

WILL COST $25,000, Building To Be Remodeled As Machinery Goes In.

Engineers began tearing down the plant of the Southern Ice & Utilities Co. here today to remodel the building and install entirely new ice-making machinery.

Expansion plans for the Hope plant, which is already the largest in Southwest Arkansas, call for the expenditure of approximately $25,000, according to J. J. Kirby, Jr., manager.

The steam plant is to be torn out and replaced with a 150-horsepower Rathburn-Jones gas engine, eliminating all boilers. During the coming season ice will be manufactured from raw water, under the "agitation" process, instead of from distilled water by the old steam system.

The construction of the new plant will include the installation of freezing tanks, with vertical coils of the most approved type, new frames, can and helix.

A new ammonia compressor will be installed with new piping, and a remodeled and enlarged storage room.

During the time that the machinery is being installed, the plant-building at 522 East Division street will be remodeled and improved. The company will build a new concrete ice-platform, new garages and new stables for the rolling stock, according to Manager Kirby.

Arkansas Fugitive Caught In Nevada

Believed To Be Member of Gang Who Held Up Russellville Bank.

LOS VEGAS, Nev. Feb. 21.—(AP)—A man believed to be John T. Dunn, wanted for murder in Clarksville, Arkansas, since 1902, was arrested here Tuesday night, constable Joe May revealed today when information reached here that sheriff Russell of Johnson county Arkansas was en route here.

The prisoner has lived here several years under the names of "Big Dick Burns" and "Hot Shot Brown." He was known to police as a gambler.

He denied he was a member of a quartet who held up the Clarksville bank in 1902 and killed Sheriff John Tower in a running gun fight. Officers here said he answered the description furnished by Arkansas authorities. He has a scar on the right side and is 64 years old. He admitted he was in Wichita, Kansas, and Clarksville, Arkansas, in 1902.

Arkansas authorities said Dunn's three companions were dead, two being hanged for the murder of Tower and the third died in prison.

A reward of $11,000 was offered for the capture of Dunn at the time of the robbery.

ASHDOWN, Feb. 21.—Burt Davis, construction foreman for the Southwestern Gas & Electric Co., is here with a crew ready to begin work on the new white way to be placed on Front, Main and Commerce streets. The material is also on hand. The ornamental posts will be 75 feet apart on alternate sides of the street.

A survey was made and it was found that there were three obstructions that would interfere with the arrangement. One is a telephone pole, another an awning jutting out too far. It is necessary to meet with the council in order to iron these matters out before actual work can begin.

Eva Dugan Hanged In Arizona For the Death of Her Employer

Account With Justice Is Marked "Paid In Full."

FLORENCE, Ariz., Feb. 21.—(AP)—Mrs. Eva Dugan, 52-year-old housekeeper and mother of two children was hanged at the state penitentiary here today for the murder in 1927 of her employer, A. J. Mathis, Tucson, Arizona, rancher.

Mrs. Dugan calmly walked the 13-step ladder to the gallows and smiled as she stood on the trap while officials adjusted the black hood about her.

Unshaken in her resolve to "show the world I can take my medicine" she went to her death without a last minute statement. Surveying the crowd of spectators and prison officials, she clasped the hand of Lorenzo Wright, prison warden, and said "goodbye daddy Wright." A few seconds later at 5:11 a. m. the trap was sprung and Eva Dugan's account with justice was marked "paid in full."

Mrs. Dugan was the first woman to pay the death penalty in Arizona for a crime. Mathis was slain in January 1927, but his body was not discovered until a year later.

Mrs. Dugan, who had been employed as Mathis' housekeeper had driven his automobile to White Plains, New York, where she was arrested as a car thief, and after the body of Mathis was found, she was returned to Arizona charged with murder.

At the trial she testified that a 19-year-old youth known as "Jack" had committed the slaying and that she ran away with him.

Authorities have not been able to locate the mysterious Jack.

Reece Caudle Case Dismissed Today; Evidence Valueless

Case Is Dismissed On Motion of State Is Report

RECORDS MISSING

Prosecuting Attorney Cybert Says May Permanently End Trial

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 21.—(AP)—Charged of attempted bribery against Reece Caudle, member of the Arkansas Railroad commission, was dismissed today on a motion of the state. The unexpected act came in the second day of the trial.

Prosecuting attorney A. D. Cybert explained the dismissal of the trial was due to certain evidence as indispensable in the state's effort to convict Caudle had been found to be valueless. The evidence in connection with the alleged conspiracy existing between Caudle and John Tartin, indicted with Caudle but never arrested was of unsound basis. Caudle and Tartin are accused of attempted bribery of a member of the 1929 Arkansas legislature, Senator John Quarles, of Helena, to vote on a horse racing bill. The bill, however, passed both houses but was voted by Governor Parnell.

Mr. Cybert said the dismissal of the case may permanently end the prosecution of Caudle. Whether the charges against Tartin will be dropped was not announced today.

Yesterday was spent in legal maneuvers in which Prosecuting Attorney Cybert was cited for contempt of court and fined $500 by Judge Abner McGee who later suspended his order.

Mr. Cybert told the Associated Press following the dismissal of the case that telephone call records of the Marion hotel were missing despite the fact that they were in possession of the prosecutor for a short time last March. These records revealed Caudle had entered several calls to Hot Springs on January 1, 1929, alleged by the state to be getting in touch with Tartin.

Yesterday in preliminary hearing before the trial opened, attorneys for Caudle admitted calls were placed to Hot Springs but were not to Tartin. They said the calls were in regard to a sick friend.

Records of the telephone company which were introduced into the trial by telephone officials did not show of any calls placed at that date by Caudle from the Hotel Marion.

Two Fliers Killed In Unusual Crash

Marine Planes, Flying in Formation, Suddenly Dive Into River.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—(AP)—What was described as one of the most unusual air accidents in the history of the flying service Thursday took the lives of Lieut. Joseph Leon Wolfe, of Coeburn, Va., and Second Lieut. William R. Osterlag of Columbia, Penn., Marine Corps aviators.

Eye witnesses said that the two planes were flying in formation with Wolfe leading when they dived from a comparatively low height into the Potomac river near Quantico, Va., a short time after their take-off for an afternoon in the air.

Officials said there had been no collision in the air and that they were unable to explain the accident.

The bodies were pinned in the cockpit and were extricated with difficulty.

Wolfe was the son of Dr. J. E. Wolfe of Coeburn and graduated from the Naval Academy in 1926. He served a year in China, and later at the naval air station at Pensacola, Fla., before his transfer to Quantico.

Osterlag was graduated from the naval Academy in 1924, and served a short time in the Marine Corps before resigning. He later was commissioned in the Marine Corps reserves and had been on active duty at Quantico for two years.

Mrs. Mary Agnes Hamilton, Labor member of the British Parliament, expects to visit Canada soon.

He was in the 10-B grade of Hope senior high school.

Details of the accident were lacking as The Star went to press this afternoon, but it was reported that Lewis hopped on the bus for a ride across town, and was jolted off at the railroad crossing.

PINE BLUFF, Feb. 21.—(AP)—Disappearance of H. John (fish dealer), said to be the only witness to the slaying of Gentry Miller on a house boat in Arkansas county last October was reported to authorities today by his wife who expressed belief that her husband had met with foul play.

Mrs. John said he left her the first of February for St. Charles, Arkansas county to get a load of fish. He departed with his automobile, and taking a boat which was equipped with a motor. After he had been gone several days Mrs. John became alarmed and made an inquiry at St. Charles, where she was told he had none to Tishorn, in the same county. The Greatness of Washington

It is rather hard to understand why the third volume of Rupert Hughes' biography of George Washington, recently published, should have caused such a furore. To be sure, Hughes does treat some of our ancient traditions rather harshly. But the Washington that he paints is an even greater man, if possible, than the Washington of the school history books.

In the school books Washington appears as a benign and saintly man who led a united nation to victory over a cruel foe. All of his associates are depicted as patriotic, self-sacrificing men, and the colonist are held up as a brave, liberty-loving people who were willing to make any sacrifices to bring their cause to victory.

Hughes gives a different picture—and it might be pointed out that the leading historians agree with him. He shows that Washington, far from having the united support of his people, had to contend with warring factions, with public indifference and with outright opposition from the beginning of the revolution to the end. He shows that an enormous percentage of the American populace was actively Tory in its sympathies. He shows that the colonists did not make very good soldiers, on the whole; that they deserted, ran away from battle, and were terribly hard to discipline. He shows that profiteers gyped the army right and left and that the intrigues and selfish ambitions of his associates made Washington's path a rocky one from the beginning.

In short, he paints such a picture of disorganization, graft and incompetence that it seems almost impossible that America ever would have won the war.

From all of this, of course, Washington's true greatness emerges. The nation won its independence because of Washington's ability to rise above all these obstacles. Instead of defaming Washington, Hughes is really adding to our appreciation of him. He makes it clear that Washington was, very truly, the father of his country.

The Democratic Primary

A spokesman for Arkansas Democrats who bolted the nomination of Alfred E. Smith and Joseph T. Robinson for president and vice president of the United States, Dr. A. C. Millar demands that the Democratic party's code be so amended that their right to vote in primaries may not be challenged.

E. L. Compere, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, points out that the rule Dr. Millar wants re-enacted was made by the Democratic state convention and it can be changed only by that supreme party authority. This is not to say that the Democratic committee would change the rule if it could.

Dr. Millar's open letter, in which his demand was made, was not couched in words that would make for peace and harmony and reconciliation. He referred to the Democratic party's candidate for president as "the pseudo-Democratic presidential candidate" and again as "the false Democrat Smith." Alfred E. Smith was just as fairly squarely and legitimately the Democratic candidate for president as Woodrow Wilson was or as Grover Cleveland and Samuel J. Tilden were.

Dr. Millar complains that in 1928 the "Northeastern element" of the Democratic party dominated, and he declares that this element "has little in common with the South." Dr. Millar even uses words so unfortunately un-American as the "alien Northeast." It is the "alien Northeast" that has given the Democratic party the only three candidates that have been elected since the Civil War: Samuel J. Tilden, governor of New York, who was deprived of his title to the presidential office; Grover Cleveland, governor of New York, and Woodrow Wilson, governor of New Jersey. As Democratic governor of New York Alfred E. Smith had every right to aspire to the Democratic nomination for president; it may indeed be said that three elections as governor are more than enough to make a Democrat the logical nominee of his party. This eventually was not agreeable to Dr. Millar and to millions of other Democrats, but it was inevitable.

The Gazette earnestly desires peace and harmony and unity in the Democratic party in Arkansas. The best thing for Dr. Millar and his followers to do is to do nothing. As a matter of fact there will in all probability be very few cases where an anti-Smith Democrat's vote will actually be challenged in the next state primary. Even though the Democrats in charge of the party's affairs in this state may lack both the power and the disposition to change the rule to which Dr. Millar objects they will do all they can consistently do for a united and harmonious party. —Arkansas Gazette.

She Who Laughs Last—!

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—It seldom happens that a man is put in prison and then makes so much trouble that his captors have to boot him out, but something of the sort seems to be happening to the Philippines.

Thirty years or so ago our dreamers of Empire saw one of their visions realized when President McKinley took over the Philippine Islands for the good of the Philippines. Today the Philippines are squawking louder than ever about the disadvantages of American rule, and they are joined by various powerful American interests which complain that the Philippines are detrimental to us 100 per cent Americans.

The Philippines don't mind their unpopularity a bit, thinking that the more unpopular they are the sooner they are likely to be independent.

Tells How Cause Advances

The attitude and position of the Philippines was outlined in an interview by Dr. Hilarlo Camino Montecado of Los Angeles, president of the Philippine Federation of America. The federation represents Filipinos in the United States, of whom there are about 65,000. Dr. Montecado came here to see President Hoover in the interests of Philippine independence.

"There are 35,000 Filipinos in California," he said in discussing the recent race-labor riots in that state, "and about 85 per cent of them are engaged in agriculture, living cheaply. These people never saw any American laborers in our islands, and they didn't suppose they would be competing with any when they came here. There are 70,000 more in Hawaii and most of them hope to get to California eventually. All this has worried the labor organizations in the far west and so for several years we have had the American Federation of Labor agitating for independence.

"If we weren't part of the United States we could be kept outside by immigration laws. I'm sure that if independence were granted nearly all the Filipinos would go back, for they are strongly patriotic and know they can't be assimilated here. The Philippine legislature would pass an anti-emigration law because we will need men to work our resources.

"Then we have the unsolicited support of American, Cuban and Hawaiian sugar interests which are very anxious for us to be independent so that we can't ship in any more duty-free sugar. But that is all right with us, for if we get independence we will be more self-reliant. We will develop our brains and live simply and get along beautifully. We can live for 50 cents a day in the Philippines.

"We have the Ku Klux Klan on our side because it favors a purely white race of Americans. We are very proud of our race, but we will be glad if the Klan will help make us free.

"The American and Cuban tobacco interests want us to be independent for the same reason which actuates the sugar men. The tobacco interests are supposed to be very powerful and I hope their influence is not exaggerated. "In addition we have the true American spirit of liberty on our side, but somehow we never got anywhere on sympathy and idealism."

Clarence Saunders In Red Hot Retort

Chain Magnate Shoots A Flame of Blistering Vitrol at KWKH.

Like another meteor, whistling, flaming and exploding with a terrific blast, came a statement to the public from the pen of Clarence Saunders, Memphis chain store magnate, who viciously takes to task "Old Man" Henderson of radio station KWKH at Shreveport for the latter's incessant tirade against the absentee owned retail store monopoly. The statement from Mr. Saunders is characteristic of his poignant style of dealing with a subject distasteful to him, and in no uncertain terms he spills the beans of condemnation from the head of the announcer of the "Hello World" broadcasting station.

Mr. Henderson of the Shreveport station has for many weeks vehemently denounced and condemned the chain store monopoly as a system destructive of independent, home-owned retail merchandising interests, and apparently has enlisted nationwide support of his warfare against what he terms is a centralized effort of Wall Street to bring local business operations under the yoke of greedy monopoly.

Clarence Saunders, probably stinging under the rebuke administered to his chain system and the system of other chain store interests comes out in the open with a verbal attack that is rather scathing in its construction. He makes the declaration in his statement this morning that he is going to wage into the fight against "Old Man" Henderson without reserve. His first article which we believe our readers will read with interest, is as follows:

Mr. Saunders' Statement

"Eat your cotton.
"Don't sell it to a foreigner.
"Have nothing to do with the heathens without the borders of your home town.

"Build a stone wall around the home town and let no stranger come over it. Stop all progress and let grass grow in the streets that the home cow may there graze. Kill that same cow for your beef to eat for the foreign raised beef is only to be shipped into take money out of the home town to send it to the big packers of Wall Street.

"Don't sell your oil out of the well to the Standard Oil Company or to anybody but your home folks, for if you do, they'll take it and send it back as gasoline and refined oil to take money away from the home town for Wall Street.

"Don't sell your cotton seed to the mills of Proctor and Gamble or to any other big Wall Street pirates, for if you do you'll pay out the money of the home town for soap, cooking oil and compound lard to make Wall Street richer.

"Don't sell the lumber of your home town or your iron, or coal to the daylight burglars of Wall Street, for if you do, you'll buy it all back in automobiles and other manufactured articles for the benefit of the Wall Street gang.

"Don't sell your cotton to the foreign corporations of Wall Street, for if you do you'll buy it back in automobiles and other things to make fatter the gold belly of Wall Street.

"Let the inhabitants of the home town eat all the rice, the sugar cane, the sugar beets, the beans and potatoes, the cabbage, the strawberries, the tomatoes, the corn, the peas and all the eggs and chickens grown and raised in the home town community, for if it's right for the home town not all the people are the thinking and reasoning kind and that's my reason for making these remarks.

"If the people want the red terror of Russia to clutch at the throats of the American public—if they want discord and misrepresentation to go unbridled in a mad fury against a fancied money octopus such as old man Henderson describes everybody to be that his slobbering mouth can reach—then let a demagogue like from his duties at the Hope National Bank for the past two weeks, is improving, which will be pleasing to his many friends.

Henderson keep up his tirade and he'll have a multitude of recruits who will join in with him to tear down merely to get the money for their own pockets, while they profess falsely that they are the champions of the people for no profit to themselves.

"Old man Henderson's racket of arousing passions and prejudices is as old as the first man born who undertook to capitalize the ignorance of his fellow men for his own private gain.

"But Mr. Henderson is up-to-date in his method—he's using a powerful radio station—licensed by the Federal Government to use—a license he got without telling the government what damnable uses he'd put it to—and after he gets it and is all set for his dirty besmirching of other people he says to Hell with the government and anybody else that says nay to him.

"Old man Henderson says Wall Street never sends back to the home town any of the money it collects from the home town.

"I'll bet a pessimism grown on my home place that this so-called champion of the people's rights against Wall Street will not pull as much as a slick penny out of his fat pocket and send it back to the good old home town where it came from to him.

"Nol He'll spout his hot air instead and tell the poor misguided one who parted with his money that the sound of his voice is sufficient return for the money that left the home town to go and hide in the pocket of old man Henderson.

"And I say that you who send him money for his hot air ought not to get anything back but hot air, and hot air only will you get.

"I'm going to punch a lot more facts at you, old man Henderson, that will make you madder and madder, and the madder you get the more foolish you will act.

"That there'll be no mistake as to who wrote this article, I, Clarence Saunders, wrote every word of it and I live at Memphis, Tenn.—A short journey from Shreveport to Memphis or from Memphis to Shreveport."

"Honeymoon", Comedy At New Grand Saturday

Film fans who enjoy a good laugh and a novel picture are promised more than value received in "Honeymoon," the Merto-Goldwyn-Mayer large comedy which comes to New Grand theatre Saturday.

Flash, the wonder dog, is the principal comedian of this merry-melange, with Polly Moran and Harry Hribbon two screen comies who need no introduction or recommendation to local audiences, sharing the joys and sorrows of the plot. And, although he is not credited with a featured role, a small white cat also is prominent in the cast. At least so far as Flash is concerned.

The story of "Honeymoon" recalls the devotion of a dog to a girl who marries the rival of the dog's former master. Jilted and heartbroken, the ex-suitor cannot remain out of his sweetheart's life, so he presents her his dog as a wedding gift. More out of love for the dog than because of love for the jilted one, the bride accepts. That is but the start of the story. Like Mary's little lamb, Flash is sure to go everywhere the bride goes, and any time the groom tries to embrace his wife the dog appears upon the scene with a fiery disposition that broods trouble.

Be a friend. You don't need money; just a disposition sunny; the wish to help another along some way or other; just a kindly hand extended out to one who's unfortunates; the will to give or lend, is will make you someone's friend. The pay is bigger (though not written by a figure) than is earned by people clever what's merely self-endeavor. I have friends instead of neighbors the profits of your labors; you'll be richer in the end than a prince, if you're a friend. —E. A. Guest.

DEAR FRIENDS:

A lady told Mr. Moses the other day that for eight years she had been doing all of her husband's pressing and for the same eight years her husband has been helping her with the family washing each Monday.

Two weeks ago he signed off on the washing deal, and now she has cancelled out on the pressing.

Hall-Moses Cleaning Co. is going to save her a lot of work as a result of the new arrangement. Pressing pants and coats with a flat iron on an ironing board is about zero as far as entertainment is concerned.

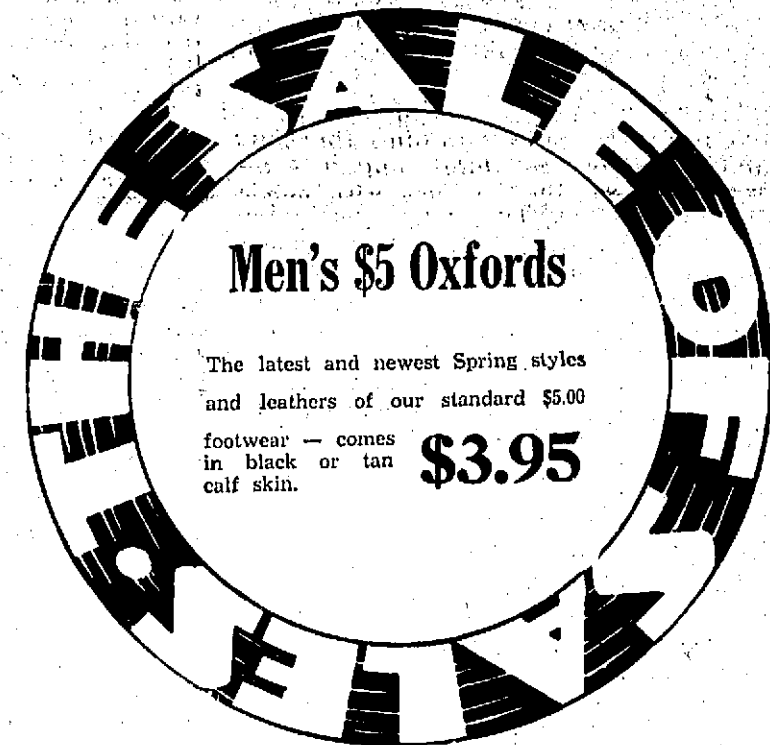

I don't want to start anything here in Hope, but if I were a married woman I certainly wouldn't press my husband's clothes—when I could send them to Hall-Moses.

Menu For the Family

BY SISTER MARY

MANY housekeepers regard the artichoke as an imported delicacy quite beyond the average pocketbook and the ordinary skill to prepare.

There are two common varieties, the globe or French and the Jerusalem. The Jerusalem is a variety different from the French artichoke, which really is a flower bud.

French artichokes are usually most plentiful in market when other fresh vegetables are scarce and high. They offer a delicious variety at a most opportune time, for they are very simple to prepare and serve and often take the place of a green salad.

One artichoke is usually eaten as a "serving," although the globe may be halved or even quartered. They should be cooked whole and divided just before serving.

The center or "choke" is always removed before serving but is usually left in white cooking, for after it is cooked it pulls out easily. If removed before cooking, cut away with a sharp knife and the artichoke with a cord to keep its shape.

Choose fresh green globes from which a leaf will pull easily when marketing for artichokes, for they will be more tender and delicately flavored.

To prepare for cooking, wash through several waters and cut stem close to leaves. Pull off hard outer leaves and cut off top about 2-4 inch down. Let stand in cold water to cover after vinegar in the proportion of one tablespoon vinegar to one quart water has been added. Let stand one hour. Drain and cook in boiling salted water for 30 to 40 minutes. Drain and serve with Hollandaise sauce, melted butter or a hot mayonnaise.

Each leaf is pulled off with the fingers and dipped into the sauce and the soft part is eaten. The sauce is served in a separate individual dish or a thick sauce can be served on the side of the plate.

The Italians cook artichokes with cheese and olive oil.

Raw Romance

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JUDITH CAMERON, New York typist, married a rich man, KNIGHT, a millionaire of the publishing house in which she is employed. Knight is a widower with a daughter, TONY, 15, and son, JUNIOR, 10. Tony despises Judith as a gold digger. Her father moves her to a new home. Judith comes home for Christmas holidays but she is equally satisfied.

ANDY CRAIG, a young man, has been taken to a hospital. He is in love with Tony and calls on her frequently. Tony flies to the city and sees her meet a young man. She threatens to tell her father unless Andy goes to an inexpensive hotel on upper Broadway. Next day she returns to the city, pursued by a sense of guilt. She finally reaches the water-front.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLIV

NONE of the men and women about her noticed the girl dressed in shabby black sitting alone on a bench facing the water. Judith studied her neighbors. There were two old men, white-haired and red-checked, who sat nearest. Their collars were hunched up about their chins to ward off the wind. The two men were arguing, though she could not hear what they said. One old fellow was tall and thin. The other's shoulders were bent and one side of his mouth moved, chewing rhythmically.

Far at the left a girl was scattering crumbs for the pigeons that swirled and fluttered about her head. Standing, gazing off down the harbor, were several sailors. Others in short jackets and jaunty caps lolled on benches and blinked at the sun.

A party of feminine sight-seers passed Judith, chatting animatedly. Messenger boys, stenographers, women pushing baby carriages were all part of the throng. Each group was preoccupied, oblivious to the rest.

Judith Knight's mind was busy, too. She stared at the water, drawn by its restless lure. Far in the distance great ships were heading oceanward. Others, returning from foreign seas, were steaming into port.

Starting out at the hazy horizon, Judith lost herself in reverie. Minutes passed. Then she remembered what had happened and her melancholy returned.

But the stir, the noise of the river traffic was tonic. It challenged the girl.

For two hours she remained in the park at the water's edge. Then she left her bench and walked to the subway station. Time was no object with Judith. She watched the long express train rumble out of sight, then boarded a local.

Thirty minutes later she emerged into daylight. She went back to the hotel and up the elevator to her room.

Judith turned the key in the latch and swung the door open. It was only a little after four o'clock, bright daylight out of doors, but here in the little room with its one window facing the court, everything was black.

She snapped the electric light switch, threw off her hat and coat and dropped them on the bed. She went to the window and gazed out uncertainly. After those hours in the fresh air and sunlight this hideous place was intolerable.

NO—it was not the room, Judith faced the truth honestly, at last. She was afraid. For 24 hours she had been terrified by forbidding horrors she had refused to name. She was afraid of what should happen when Arthur Knight knew the truth. She was afraid even of admitting she was afraid.

The whole sickening panorama passed before her mind. Why not admit it? She was beaten! Judith did not know how long she stood staring out of the window. An idea, vague but persistent, was beginning to shape itself in her mind. She considered this idea, discarded it, then went groping in search of it again.

Suppose she should go to Arthur? "No, no, no!" caution argued. "What would you say? What could you tell him?" "Tell him the truth!" came the answering argument. "Tell him all you should have told before your marriage."

"But I'm afraid!" "There it was! Fear of what disclosure would bring on one hand—fear of concealment on the other. The conflicting elements of Judith's nature battled back and forth. Such fights are not settled quickly. In this case too much was at stake.

Judith knew she had given Tony a promise to stay away for two weeks. But what was that promise except payment of blackmail? She had agreed to leave the house for two weeks. She was doing this in order that Tony would not tell her father what she knew.

Was it decent to bargain thus? Was such a promise binding? Other elements entered into the struggle. Why, Judith asked herself, was Tony so anxious to have her leave? What could two weeks—eternally though they seemed to Judith—do to change the situation? How would she feel when at the end of that period she returned home?

The tangle seemed hopeless. Oh, there were points that were clear enough! Judith Knight knew what she wanted—to regain Arthur's love and their former happiness. She wanted this so desperately that she was afraid to gamble.

To see Arthur again—to tell him the whole story—to see the light of forgiveness in his eyes! But no, Arthur Knight would not forgive.

Judith slipped to her knees and buried her head on the bed. "Oh, God," she prayed, "help me! Help me to know what is right!" Suddenly she knew that was the important thing. Not her own selfish happiness should guide her, but the thing that was right. In pleading for guidance her prayers had been answered.

Judith was strangely pale, strangely stirred as she arose. She caught a glimpse of her reflection in the mirror and stared at it. She scarcely recognized herself.

Her wrist-watch told her it was nearly six o'clock. Judith disrobed, bathed and dressed afresh. Then she made ready to leave the room. Habit made her pause on the threshold and glance back over her shoulder. Assured that she had not forgotten anything, she stepped into the hall and looked the door.

A subtle change had taken place in Judith Knight's appearance. The boy in the elevator eyed her curiously, but Judith did not notice this.

Through the hotel lobby and out on the street she moved. Involuntarily she sought the restaurant where she had lunch.

WHEN she had finished her dinner she paid the cashier and stepped into the street.

Glowing electric lights beamed but Judith ignored them. For several blocks she walked without noticing her surroundings. Then she realized that she had passed the corner where she should have turned to reach the hotel. Still she continued.

She was not thinking—at least Judith told herself she did not want to think. Subconsciously her mind was in ferment. Should she go back to Arthur? Should she remain here?

The long afternoon out of doors had made her weary. At last Judith turned and made her way back to the hotel.

When she was in her room once more she slipped into the one chair and drew a long sigh. Yes, she was tired, physically and mentally. She told herself she had come no nearer to a decision.

But that was not true. When any problem is stated and faced frankly the battle is over. Judith was unaware of this.

She was painstaking that evening about her preparations for the night, cleansed her face carefully with cream, cleaned it with hot water and brushed her hair, 50 strokes on either side. It was as though, by busying herself at these tasks, she sought to forget more important things.

At last, though it was still early in the evening, she turned out the light and climbed into bed.

If Judith Knight had only known it her decision already was made. She had reached the turning point in the searing agony of that moment when she had slipped to her knees and cried, "Help me know what is right!"

JUDITH slept late the next morning. She took a long walk before luncheon and again in the afternoon visited Battery Park. It was as she sat watching a glorious white liner with crimson stacks glide slowly out into the harbor that involuntarily her two hands clasped together.

"I'll do it!" Judith said to herself. "I'm going—now!"

In a tumult of energy she rushed toward the subway. Down the steps Judith ran. Oh, she must hurry now! She must hurry before she lost courage!

A train was pulling in. Judith leaped aboard as the doors opened. A good omen—she saw that it was an express, and the right one.

The electric demon could not go fast enough to satisfy her. Local stations flashed into sight and out again. Yellow lights, green lights, red lights twinkled in the subterranean caverns. It all seemed slow and annoying to Judith's impatience.

She was the first one out of the car when the doors slid back. Up the steps she sped. She was breathless and running when she reached the hotel.

"If I hurry," she told herself, "I can make the 4:10."

She must make the 4:10! She must make it! Otherwise there would be an impossible half-hour's delay and she could not reach the house until after five o'clock.

Luckily there was little to pack. Pajamas, lingerie, comb and brush and cosmetics were tossed into the traveling bag, helter-skelter. When they were all in and the bag locked Judith grabbed it up and ran.

She chafed at the cashier's delay as he hunted for her bill.

"Taxi!" asked the driver stationed before the door.

No, the subway would be quicker. Without bothering to answer, Judith ran down the street.

The traveling bag was not heavy. She swung onto a train, barely squeezing in before the automatic doors clicked shut. Judith dropped into the first seat and eyed each passing station defiantly. As they neared the railway station she made her way to the door, ready to dash out the minute the train stopped.

Off to the ticket window and down a flight of stairs to the suburban trains, Judith's heart bounded. There, waiting, stood the 4:10.

She entered the nearest car and found a seat. A cold little shiver ran down her spine.

"It 'hell only listen!" Judith prayed. "If Arthur will only understand—"

Now that the excitement of catching the train was ended, there was a lump in Judith's throat. She was afraid that Arthur would not understand.

But even her worst fears had not prepared Judith Knight for the moment 30 minutes later when she faced Arthur Knight in the living room of his home.

"I'm back!" she faltered. Knight eyed his young wife coolly and deliberately.

"What have you come for?" he asked.

Says Long Skirts A Backward Step

Prof. Mount Says They Leave Too Much To Imagination.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 21.—Long skirts now in vogue may cover a multitude of sins, but they mark a step backward in national morality, according to how they are viewed by a college professor.

With the lengthening of skirts we have developed a backward tendency in our standard of morality," said George H. Mount, in an interview with the Daily Trojan, the official class newspaper of the University of Southern California. Dr. Mount is chairman of the department of psychology at the university.

Continuing, Dr. Mount said: "Many years ago, when a man had the opportunity of seeing a woman's ankles, he felt he had seen something and been some place. Then the ankle began to attract attention, and the interest no longer had any sex appeal. So we have had a moral evolution from the ankle to the step-in."

Nothing Shocks

Present day people have arrived at a point where they assume no artificial moral standards—such as being shocked at the sight of certain feminine garments, but accept them as a matter of course the same as other present day objects.

"We have become educated to view such things without having any inward inhibitions, for it is the same as when the leg had its day. The ankle no longer was a thing of curiosity," explained the doctor.

With the longer dress, people will

What this Doctor did for Humanity

As a young man the late Dr. R. V. Pierce practiced medicine in Pennsylvania and was known far and near for his great success in alleviating disease. Finally he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., and put up in ready-to-use form his GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY, the well-known tonic for the blood. This strength builder is made from a formula which Dr. Pierce found most effective when in private practice. It aids digestion, acts as a tonic and enriches the blood—clears away pimples and annoying eruptions and tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. All druggists. Tablets or liquid.

have a tendency again to return to a state of mind where the upper limb will be a matter of masculine curiosity because it is hidden from view, and people will again begin to assume an artificiality of moral goodness, more than the ankle and being careful not to show more than an ankle. In this way a reversal of morality standards might be attained.

We Are No Worse

"If we were to come to a point of complete nudity in the same stages of evolution that we have progressed from the ankle to the knee, we would not feel any self-consciousness or be any more 'sex' minded than we are today," contended Dr. Mount.

"I don't think that the present generation is any worse than its predecessors. In fact the young lady of today is farther along the road to ideal womanhood than any of her past generations."

The co-ed of today, in general, is better groomed, better looking, healthier, and more alert. She is less reticent and self-conscious than her predecessors of unhealthy clothing and assumed artificiality," concluded Dr. Mount.

over station KTHS at Hot Springs at 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon.

The day was observed in honoring the memory of the late Dr. J. W. Conger, first president of Ouachita and for years the most outstanding educator in Arkansas. Yesterday was his birthday anniversary. Dr. Conger was president of the institution for 21 years, from its founding to 1907.

Arkadelphia people joined the students and faculty in the large audience that heard the program here. The military band gave several numbers. Dr. W. A. Forbes, nearly 90 years of age and one of the founders of Ouachita, was the first speaker. He recounted much of the early history of the college from the events that led up to its founding until it got well established. Governor James P. Eagle, W. J. Cross, J. B. Searcy and others including early citizens of Arkadelphia were praised for their efforts along with Dr. Conger's for the great task of establishing the college under the most adverse circumstances. He said that 50 years ago most of the Baptist preachers of Arkansas were opposed to higher education. He is a minister, himself. But in the face of all the opposition the project was put over.

Dr. B. F. Condray, professor of education, and registrar, at Ouachita, delivered the eulogy to Dr. Conger. Dr. Condray was a student under the first president and after his graduation and graduate studies in other institutions, he returned to become a member of the faculty. His acquaintance and friendship of Dr. Conger was very close for many years and until the latter's death, less than 10 years ago. Dr. Condray said the first president was a man of distinguished personal appearance had a dynamic and compelling personality, was interested in the people and made hundreds of friends, inspired both students and his wide circle of acquaintances and he was a man of great vision and faith. He was human and in spite of his greatness had obvious faults, but "even the sun has spots on it," the eulogist said.

At the close of the program in the auditorium, a telegram from Gov. W. J. Holloway of Oklahoma was read which expressed the opinion that Dr. Conger was one of the greatest educators Arkansas has ever had. Governor Holloway is an Ouachita alumnus.

Led by the band playing a solemn march, the students in pairs followed by the faculty and friends walked to the front of the campus and gathered in a group before the mausoleum which contains the bodies of Dr. and Mrs. Conger.

Here the benediction was pronounced by Dr. H. L. Winburn.

The building will be a brick veneer, one-story cottage type.

CAMDEN, Ark., Feb. 21.—A conference of interested citizens has been called by the officials of the South Arkansas Chamber of Commerce to convene in Stuttgart, Wednesday, March 5, to give careful thought and study to the importance of the proposed trunk line highway between points in northeast and southwest Arkansas with Memphis as the eastern gateway.

Thrills! Mystery! Danger! Romance!

"Murder Backstairs" Is Tingling Detective Story

MURDER had been committed at the fashionable Berkeley mansion, where house guests were gathered for a week-end party.

The body of Doris Matthews, a pretty maid, was found in the swimming pool. The only clew was the pungent odor of perfume that hovered about the murdered girl.

Even this insubstantial clew apparently was valueless because Gigi Berkeley, beautiful young daughter of the host, had sprinkled all the guests with a similar perfume the preceding night.

"Bonnie" Dundee

Gigi Berkeley

A SHARP-THINKING young detective, "Bonnie" Dundee, was present to keep an eye on Seymour Crosby, one of the guests, who had never quite satisfactorily explained circumstances surrounding the death of his first wife.

How the keen-witted Dundee solved the crime, found that the murder of Doris Matthews was intended for someone else whose death had long been plotted, furnishes one of the most thrilling, yet true to life, mysteries ever written.
